Senate.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14. The Committee on Privileges and, Elections presented a manimous report on the West Virginia case declaring that Charles J. Faulkner and was duly elected Senator.

The Senate took up the bill introduced by Mr. Morrill to regulate immigration and was addressed by that Senator in explantion.

If quoted the reply of Balfour to the question in the House of Commons as to Government aiding emigration, to the effect that that Government would apply no more money to that purpose during the remainder of the year emigration. At the end of the year emigration and the end of the year emigration and was addressed by the Government aiding emigration, to the question in the House of Commons as to Government aiding emigration, to the effect that that Government would apply no more money to that purpose during the remainder of the year. Mr. Balfour had not said parishes or neighbors should not add emigration. At the end of the year emigration might be aided by the Government again, unless the Pishery Commission should implore Balfour to abstain from putting briers in their path while cunning diplomacy is going on here. The papers of Great Britain numbered very nearly a round million, outside of uncounted vignants and easual papers, who far exceeded the number of so-called papires.

There was too strong a tendency in Europe to regard the United States as a gessapool for the violent products of the Old World.

It is demanded that Young America should not be wholly deprived of its birth right. The measure introduced by him is intended to regulate immigration by a scheme so moderate as to receive general approval. Soon after eight o'clock a short entertainment was given and the following was the programme: Song, "Luilaby," Miss Annie Sweet; select reading, Mrs. Godfrey; song, "Smile, Slumber," Mrs. Helen Winslow Potter; "Literary Salad." The selection by Miss Sweet was rendered in her usual skillful and pleasing manner, and in response to an encore she sang "Love's Old Sweet Song." Mrs. Godfrey gave much pleasuace by the reading which was closely listened to. Mrs. Potter's splendid voice was heard to great advantage and her selection was heartily applauded. A great crowd assembled at the Municipal Court yesterday forenoon some time before ten o'clock to hear the examination of Whitaey and Foster, the suspected Plymouth robbers, and owing to the great number waiting to witness the proceedings it was decided to adjourn to the Supreme Court Room. Here the people followed the officers and after the room had been closely filled the doors were closed and but few more were allowed inside. Outside the Court House a large crowd attond during the forenoon, but they could not be accounted in the interior. A short time before the time appointed for the hearing Sheriff Brown, with Officer Allen and Turnkey Huthaway, brought in the prisoners Whitney and Foster, who, with their wrists manacled to each other, took their seate inside the railing. # FIFTIETH CONGRESS---First Session.

Washington, Dec. 14. The Committee on Privileges and Elections presented a unanimous report on the West Virginia case declaring that Charles J. Faulkner was duly elected Senator.

The Senate took up the bill introduced by Mr. Morrili to regulate immigration and was addressed by that Senator in explanation.

He quoted the reply of Balfour to the question in the House of Commons as to Government aiding emigration, to the effect that that Government would apply no more money to that purpose during the remainder of the year. Mr. Balfour had not said parishes or neighbors should and pairshes or neighbors should not alid emigration. At the end of the year emigration and the Fishery Commission should implore Balfour to abstain from putting briers in their path while cunning diplomacy is going on here. The paupers of Great Britain numbered very hearly a round million, outside of uncounted yas and casual paupers, who far exceeded the tunited States as a cession of the two the united of the counted yas pool for the violent products of the Old World.

It is demanded that Young American should not be wholly deprived of its birth right. Soon after eight o'clock a short entertainment was given and the following was the programme: Song, "Lullaby," Miss Annie Sweet; select reading, Mrs. Godfrey; song, "Smile, Siumber," Mrs. Helen Winslow Potter; "Literary Salad." The selection by Miss Sweet was rendered in her usual skillful and pleasing manner, and in response to an encore she sang "Love's Old Sweet Song." Mrs. Godfrey gave much pleasuae by the reading which and the rest let out at interest. After counting my money I told my son Frank Bennett how much there was, and some of my relatives were in the house at the time of the robbery, and cannot say whether or not I said that his note was gone after the robbery. I don't remember whether or not I said after the robbery that the note of Daniel Gray, my sonlaw, was gone. I had a loaded revolver in the cupboard, and a small shot gun which was not loaded on the night of the robbery. At this point the hearing was adjourned to 2.300 clock in the afternoon.

We let go the anchor in a little bay, and when the schooner brought up she was in twelve feet of water, and within fifty feet of the beach. As the weather was not the sallors slept on deck, there being one white man aud dive natives. Everything passed off quietly until just in the gray of morning, when a terrible commotion on deck routed me out. It seemed that an octopus had crawled up the low side of the schooner, perhaps to gratify its curiosity, but seeing the siceping men had, perhaps, also to gratify his curiosity, finng a feeler at one of them and taken such a hold of his hand and arm that he awake with a shout of pain. The others were also aroused, and seeing what had happened they seized whatever weapons were at hand, and made the outopus release its hold. I came of deck just as it fell into the water alongside, and the splash was as heavy as if a man had fellon overbeard. A rection of the Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry cured up little girl of a severe attack of whooping cough, when her life was given over by the physician and all other remedies had failed.

A portion of the feeler which had grasped the salior had been broken off by the blows. There were three or four feet' I thand for a time! squirmed and twisted about the deck like a snake. It had touched the man's flesh only in the spot on the buck of the hand, but he made as much ado over it as one would a butlet in the leg. It was n horrible wound, however.

It was twenty minutes after we had beaton off the octopus, when there was another cry from the deck, and I heard the man run forward and stumble into the forecastle and slide the cover. More from instinct than any thought of danger, I closed the cabin door, then the skylight which lighted the cabin. After two or three minutes the saliors came climbing over the cargo—we being about one-third full—and I let them into the cabin. They said that when the octopus fell into the water, he swam off in the direction of a rocky reef on our port quarter, and distant about two bundred feet. After a few minutes

"There's one of 'em, sir—there's one?" shouted the mate at this moment, and we turned our faces to the skylight, to see three or four of the horrible feelers playing over it. At the same moment the schooner was canted to port with a sudden pull of all three streaks, or with as much force as a strong puff of wind would have exercised in open sea. At this movement, all the natives broke out into a yell of afright, and as I sternly rebuked them, one of them exclaimed:

"Oh, Captain, the devil fish have come aboard, and not one of us can escape!"

There was no longer any doubt that we were beset by the creatures. There was not a second in which the feelers were not playing over the skylight, and others could be heard fastening to and dragging things about the deck. The noise on deck might be likened to a row between four or five men. Everything movable was being moved and flung about. My skylight had a hard-wood frame and heavy glass, and the feelers found very little to grasp. The noise made as the cups fastened to the glass by suction and let go again was like the snap of a pair of pincers.
